

Definition. A critical point of a locally linear function is one where the gradient vector is zero. Equivalently, all the first partial derivatives of the function are zero.