

Definition. The period of a periodic function is its smallest positive period. It is the size of a single cycle.